A lightweight Macro Maker that lets you define multiple hotkeys. KEYMACRO is an invaluable tool for users who often switch between apps, because it has the capacity to save and restore the hotkeys used in another application. It can actually be a great alternative to the native KeymanX, which is a Windows-only application. RMB (right mouse button) + a hotkey After opening the application, you can access the "Get Hotkeys" menu. Simply press RMB (right mouse button) + a hotkey combination on the next screen, and you'll be able to access the selected option. Now it's important to understand that this process isn't directly tied to the application you're currently using. In other words, it doesn't act as a "record" button. What it does is save the selected hotkey as a shortcut that can be activated from another application by simply pressing the combination on the next screen. Before installing, you'll also need to specify the name of the shortcut. The following table shows an example of this: There are several ways to get the hotkey for the feature. The easiest way is to save the first and second row from the table above. You can click the "Save as" button next to the target entry, which is often the last option of the "Get Hotkeys" menu. However, to get the shortcut in full-screen mode, you'll need to right-click it, and then select "Copy shortcut." In the future, when you need to add more hotkeys, you can just repeat this process. On the bright side, you can assign this shortcut to a custom hotkey by clicking the name of the shortcut in the table above. Making hotkeys work with another application When using KeyMACRO, there are two ways to make it work with another application. The first method is simply to hold the hotkey down, and you'll be able to access the shortcut the moment it's released. This is the preferred option, since there's no need to go through the "Get Hotkeys" menu and press the hotkey combination. The second method works the same way as the previously mentioned method, but it requires you to activate the hotkey in another application, and that you release it right after. This option is more user-friendly, 77a5ca646e
