Introduction This guide is made up of a series of short articles (less than 2000 words or so) explaining the specifics of each class in the game. Some have a character or playstyle analysis, while others have QQC or cQC data showing what builds and builds are best (in my opinion) at certain levels. In some cases, I am going to have some sort of short theory or analysis, in others I'm just going to give the numbers without any spoilers or analysis. In the official beta client, Alliance and Horde characters can be found in the Battle Team Menu in Insane mode. I'm going to assume you are playing Horde because it's not hard to work out, and because it doesn't take long to download when you want to play. The beta client data is the best data for figuring out the best class for yourself, as it has numbers for even the 3 year old Alpha Patch 3.3 data. Because the beta client doesn't work with Class Ordering right yet, I've had to put them in the order I have them currently picked. Alliance Order Class Ordering Guide This class ordering is down based on how I have them leveled across many (what should have been) easy to run zones. Additionally, they are generally easy to play, IMO, and are also the best in single target and pvp. This is your anti-lethality, anti-tickup, anti-tickdown class. It's the least healing and tanking, and can be a serious threat if you're not focused. Note: Touch of Death is capped at being active at all times on the L2D screen. Slow is pretty easy at level 10 and will be on most bosses. In 3.3 we got the leap of faith (albeit a little bit short) that makes the Leaping Wind spell fast. Stalwart is a paladin. If you think paladins are strong, you've not levelled a paladin. This class is by far the best in PvP. Protection Paladin a Paladin who wants to be a warrior. (If) you can race and replace agility, this is the class for you. Holy Paladin/Protection Paladin Sad, Faded White Rags When you see a sad

History Moscopoli first appears in documents dating to the 13th century, when it was a fief belonging to the Aragonese Kings of Sicily, and then to the Sicilian feudal lords of Azzo. For years, it has been a center of Moorish culture and civilisation. The Western and Eastern Greeks settled here, and the Jews and Muslims from North Africa, who opened a new trade route. The Phoenicians also made it a destination for their commerce. The name of the town comes from Mosco, which is a derivation of (misso), meaning "market", and which in Italian means "marsh".
